

In New York City, the kitchen has officially graduated from being a space for chopping vegetables to a stage set against the skyline. These residences prove that cooking – or simply lingering over a glass of wine – is infinitely better when framed by the Hudson River, Central Park, or the glittering lights of Midtown. Discover five exceptional residences where kitchens combine impeccable craftsmanship with breathtaking views of New York City.

720 West End Avenue

History meets modernity at 720 West End Avenue, where Emery Roth's pre-war architecture has been reimagined by Thomas Juul-Hansen. The result is a residential masterpiece that honors its past while embracing contemporary living.

Residence 8A, a $5.9 million four-bedroom home, is anchored by a Boffi kitchen that feels both sculptural and inviting. White oak cabinetry contrasts with honed Namibia Rose marble, while large west-facing windows frame the Hudson River in all its moods. Here, every meal is served with a side of sunset.

Across Manhattan and Brooklyn, these residences prove that a kitchen can be more than a place to prepare meals. With world-class finishes and postcard-worthy views, they turn the heart of the home into a stage for the city itself.
