If Emmy-Nominated TV Characters Went Apartment Hunting in NYC...

August 8, 2025

With Emmy season in full swing, it's impossible not to daydream a little. Picture this: television's most unforgettable characters swapping sets for skyline views, scrolling through StreetEasy, and whispering "this is the one" as they step into jaw-dropping luxury residences across New York City. From glass-wrapped penthouses to chic downtown hideaways, here's where some of this year's standout nominees would feel right at home, if their stories spilled into the real world.

Laurie Duffy (The White Lotus) – 720 West End Avenue, Upper West Side

After an emotionally chaotic return from Thailand, Laurie Duffy, the composed attorney from The White Lotus, deserves a reset that feels both familiar and quietly spectacular. 720 West End Avenue, a masterfully transformed Emery Roth prewar building in a historic stretch of the Upper West Side, would be perfect for her.

Residence 4H, with its two bedrooms and 2.5 baths, offers the kind of polished serenity ideal for a woman balancing motherhood and a career in law. Interiors designed by Thomas Juul-Hansen whisper elegance in every detail, while the building's 30,000 square feet of amenities, yoga rooms, a coworking lounge, and even private parking, cater to a lifestyle focused on intentional living. It's the kind of place that says: welcome home, the next chapter starts here.

In a city where every address tells a story, it's easy to imagine Emmy-nominated characters finding their next chapter in one of New York's many luxury landmarks.
